MINERS RUSH TO TUNGSTEN FIELDS IN COLORADO

Boulder Man is Paid $800
Daily From Tungsten
Property

BOULDER, Colo.—Between $200,000 and $300,000 is being distributed every month among the tungsten miners in Boulder county, and the price of the black metal is still climbing. Gold and silver properties are being abandoned and every man who can swing a pick is hunting for a tungsten mine.
Sixty per cent ore is now worth $1900 per ton in the raw and unrefined state.

Unconfirmed reports are to the effect that the price has risen another notch, $35 per unit of 60 per cent or $1900 per ton. There is no prospect that the price will fall while the European war is in progress. Competition among buyers is keen and the coming merger of the independent steel companies of the East into a new company headed by Charles M. Schwab will result in even higher prices, it is probable.

Arthur Hinman of Nederland, who took over the mines formerly of the McKenzie brothers, when the price of the metal was normal, is said to be making $800 per day. Other miners of the Nederland district are also reaping similar prices. Many local men are interested in the mines. Sheriff Buster, Benjamin Sessel and Clarence Rossman have joined to grubstake miners who are working in properties on the Barker tract near Nederland.

Miners from Nederland report that even in spite of the cold weather in the mountains, many additional miners are arriving daily in the tungsten camps to seek their fortunes in that region prospecting for the black metal.
Hotels and boarding houses are taxed beyond capacity and the new arrivals sleep in barns or sheds and pay as high as $10 a week rent for a tent in which to live. The mountain slopes in the tungsten district are fairly lined with miners carrying picks and sacks, who are prospecting for tungsten. The camp expects an even bigger boom next spring than is prevailing at the present time.

Two Scotland Yard detectives arrived in New York on the steamer Caledonia, to take charge of investigating the case of the recently ordered extradition to England to answer charges of forgery.
